Bee Moorhead is the director of Texas Impact and its environmental program Texas Interfaith Power & Light. She is a well-known speaker on faith and the environment. An ordained Presbyterian elder and a graduate of UT's LBJ School of Public Affairs, Bee brings faith communities a combination of clear, relevant issue information, theological framing and "nuts-and-bolts" tools to help individuals and congregations care for the creation through local action and public policy advocacy

What's the big deal about churches and the environment?

The news these days is full of "churches caring for God's creation." But with all the other issues facing our world, is the environment really a top priority? How does environmental concern flow from a religious life? Do faith communities have a role to play in environmental policy? How can we maintain hope in the face of seemingly insurmountable environmental problems?

Let's talk about it
